Dancing Princesses:
The Fairy Tale Art of Ruth Sanderson
Dancing Princesses:
The Fairy Tale Art of Ruth Sanderson

A renowned fantasy artist and illustrator of children’s literature, Ruth Sanderson has created imagery for more than seventy-five picture books, many of which bring classic and original fairy tales to life, including The Twelve Dancing Princesses; Cinderella; The Golden Mare, The Firebird, and the Magic Ring; The Snow Princess, and The Enchanted Wood.

Fairy tales take place “once upon a time,” in lands full of magic, quests, princesses and princes, wise women and hermits, commoners and kings, fairies, talking animals, and magical forests. These stories, or folk tales, were first handed down by word of mouth, long before books were printed. For past generations, fairy tales were the entertainment of the times, and they continue to entertain us today. In fact, new stories are still being written, and they continue to bring us to magical places where anything might happen.
Draw
Their shoes are in tatters! Design some new dancing shoes for the twelve dancing princesses.

Worn Out Shoes

Each night, the twelve princesses put on new dancing shoes, and travel down a secret staircase, through three magical woods where the leaves sparkle with gold, silver, and diamonds. Then, they row across a lake in elegant swan boats to a magnificent palace, where they dance the night away. By evening’s end, they have danced so much that their once-new shoes are almost in tatters!

Tattered Shoes  1990
Illustration for The Twelve Dancing Princesses by Ruth Sanderson
Oil on canvas
Long ago, men wore clothing that looked very different from today—from tunics, leggings, elaborate brocade vests and coats, if you were a nobleman, to unusual hats, hoods, caps, and crowns. Look at the elaborate crown worn by the Czar in The Golden Mare, The Firebird, and the Magic Ring. Would all of those jewels have made it heavy to wear?

In historical tales, knights are often pictured wearing elaborate suits of armor, which provided protection in battle. The Enchanted Wood, Ruth Sanderson’s original fairy tale, is set during the 15th century, a time when “knights in shining armor” became known for their exciting adventures.

Though fairy tales are make-believe, artists often like to choose a specific period in history in which to set a story. The wide dresses in Cinderella were inspired by 18th century French fashion, and the dresses and hats worn in The Twelve Dancing Princesses are inspired by a much earlier time, the 15th century, in Germany.
Draw

Choose your favorite article of clothing from one of Ruth Sanderson’s artworks and sketch it here, adding new details and decorations to make it your own. Or, design a costume from your own imagination that you might like to wear!
Imagine

Close your eyes and imagine a magical setting for a fairy tale of your own design. What do you see in your mind’s eye? Describe it.

____________________________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________________________
Draw
Sketch Your Fairy Tale Setting Here!
Oddly enough, fairies are not included in all fairy tales, and when they do appear, they are not always helpful and kind. In Sleeping Beauty, for example, the thirteenth fairy bestows a curse on the Queen’s child instead of a gift, as the fairies before her had done.

In The Crystal Mountain, the Red Fairy is willing to sacrifice herself to help the hero of the story, and is transformed from a fairy into a mortal woman through her good deeds.

Imagine

If you were a fairy, what special powers would you have to change the world? List your unique abilities here:

_____________________________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________________________

The Thirteenth Fairy Stormed In 1986
Illustration for The Sleeping Beauty by Ruth Sanderson.
Oil on canvas
Draw

If you could transform yourself into a fairy, what would you look like? Would you have wings, and what colors would you wear? Sketch your ideas here.
Magical creatures appear in many classic fairy tales. Though they often appear as common animals at first, they soon reveal unique characteristics, like having the ability to speak or carry out impossible tasks. In The Golden Mare, the Firebird, and the Magic Ring, which is inspired by traditional Russian fairy tales, The Golden Mare is a talking horse that helps Alexi, the story’s main character, at every turn. Together they capture the Firebird, a mythical bird that the Czar wishes to display in a gilded cage.

In The Snow Princess, the story’s female heroine leaves her home in the icy north to see the world, crossing barren deserts of ice and snow with gentle polar bears walking by her side.

Imagine

What kind of magical animal would you like to meet? Is it the legendary unicorn, a dragon, firebird or phoenix? Or, is it an ordinary animal of your own design that might help you with a difficult task? Describe what makes your animal magical.

____________________________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________________________
Draw
Sketch your magical creature here!
Magical Things

Magical things in fairy tales come in many shapes and sizes. In The Crystal Mountain, fairies steal a huge tapestry because it is so beautiful that they want to make a copy of it. The tapestry later comes to life, turning a grand palace woven from colored threads into the real thing. A golden ring, the smallest object in The Golden Mare, The Firebird, and the Magic Ring, has the most powerful magic because it can grant wishes.

Explore
Search for other magical things in the paintings on view and name the stories they come from.

A Magic Wand

A Magic Thread

A Magic Key

A Magical Suit of Armor

Alexi Presented the Ring to the Tsar
2001
Illustration for The Golden Mare, the Firebird, and the Magic Ring by Ruth Sanderson
Oil on canvas
Imagine
If you could choose to have something with magical properties, what would that object be, and what powers would it have?

_____________________________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________________________

Draw
Sketch your magical object here!
In fairytales, things often come in threes – three brothers, three tasks, three wishes, and in the case of The Golden Mare, the Firebird, and the Magic Ring, three magical elements. A book’s title is very important, because it gives readers a hint about what the story might be about.

The Power of Three

Cover illustration for The Golden Mare, the Firebird, and the Magic Ring, by Ruth Sanderson.
Oil on canvas

Design a Book Cover

Explore the power of three by creating a book cover of your own design using three of your favorite things. Animals, superheroes, and even toys can be a part of your picture. Ruth Sanderson modeled her Firebird on an old stuffed pheasant in the flying position, but she made his wings and tail more elegant, and painted him with a fiery red glow.

Print your book title in the decorative border and sketch your book cover here!
Fairy Tale Words

Match
Match the numbered clues to words from Cinderella (bottom) to complete the puzzle!

ACROSS
1. Shining lustrously
2. Changed appearance
5. Continued steadily in action
7. Shining brilliantly
9. Ornamental needlework
10. Situation

DOWN
1. Went quickly
3. In the habit of
4. Unsuccessful
6. Attracted
8. Piece of jewelry

trinket          engaged          vain          accustomed          scurried          circumstances
embroidered          dazzling          shimmering          persisted          transformed

---

Cinderella 2002
Cover illustration for Cinderella by Ruth Sanderson
Fairy Tale Words

Match

Match the numbered clues to words from Cinderella (bottom) to complete the puzzle!

ACROSS
1. Shining lustrously
2. Changed appearance
5. Continued steadily in action
7. Shining brilliantly
9. Ornamental needlework
10. Situation

DOWN
1. Went quickly
3. In the habit of
4. Unsuccessful
6. Attracted
8. Piece of jewelry

trinket      engaged      vain      accustomed      scurried      circumstances
embroidered      dazzling      shimmering      persisted      transformed

Cinderella  2002
Cover illustration for Cinderella
by Ruth Sanderson